Workforce Development

Council

ADAMH Behavioral Health Workforce Council is creating a strategic Franklin County workforce development plan to assist in recruiting and retaining a diverse local workforce, identify funding opportunities and services capacity, strengthen career pathways, and promote related policy advocacy.

Council membership includes diverse representation from community-based service providers, hospital systems, licensing boards, professional associations, K-12 schools, colleges and universities, and residents across Franklin County.

Panel

Attracting and retaining a diverse workforce of caring behavioral health professionals impacts the ADAMH network's ability to meet current and future community needs. A panel discussion, moderated by ADAMH CEO Erika Clark Jones, brings together perspectives on best practices and next steps from the areas of education, public policy and providers.
